Burrows Ancestry.

The compiler of these Charts presents them to the students of Genealogy and of History with the hope that they find in them something of interest, and that they be a help in tracing their family ancestral lines or furnish an index for historic study.

While much of the early history is traditional, and therefore not known to be true, archaeological research is continually bringing to light and proving to be true, what before had been classed with the mythical, and it can easily be believed that these traditions were founded on events that actually occurred and in the main are true and that the deities of the ancients generally represented personages of more than lived among men.

Little credit is claimed for searching out from original sources the family history herein contained, but a sincere gratitude is entertained for the privilege of studying the works of the many authors who have put forth their best efforts to record their family histories and also of the early writers who have traced ancestry back the beginning of the present known history of Man.

No attempt is herein made to cite authorities

where he commanded Pharo's

army against the Ethiopians. Pharo gave him his own daughter for wife. Milidh brought himself of what Chaiher the Druid had long before told his ancestors and he fitted out 60 ships and with his sons sailed to Ireland.
(Song of Innisfail by Thomas Moore).

Heremon. 12 King of Ireland.
= Eua, daughter of Lughaidh, Son of Jth, of Spain.

It is a tradition that he brought with him Lia Fail (the stone of Destiny). The Kings of Ireland and Scotland were crowned upon it and the Kings of England now are. It is now in the Coronation Chair at Westminster Abbey.
Tradition is also that it was the stone used by Jacob as a pillow. Later all the Kings of Judah were crowned upon it.
Also that Jeremiah rescued it at the time of the Captivity, and that the Princess Eirea took it to Egypt. Later to Ireland and in Tara was married to Heremon.
